Grain Inspection.

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF TRADE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

Pursuant to announcement, a meeting of the Board of Trade was held at their rooms yesterday afternoon, for the purpose of hearing the report of the Committee appointed at a previous meeting, for the purpose of investigating charges of irregularity in the inspection of Grain—more particularly the grade known as No. 2 Spring Wheat. On account of the position which the President of the Board, Mr. Rumsey, held on the Committee of Inspection, Mr. Isbe, Vice President, occupied the Chair. W. W. Mitchell, Esq., Secretary.

After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting, Mr. McChesney, on behalf of the Committee, (of which he was a member,) read the following REPORT.

To the Members of the Board of Trade of the City of Chicago:

The undersigned, of the Committee of your Board, appointed by the following resolution, adopted as a regular meeting, on 'Change, Nov. 10, 1858, viz:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of certain members of this Board, great irregularities have occurred in the inspection of grain, more especially in that known as No. 2 Spring Wheat; And that a Committee consisting of Messrs. Wm. A. Walker and Mr. Sumner be appointed to investigate, and report upon the subject on Monday next, at 10 o'clock P. M."

Regretting that other engagements have deprived them of the assistance of Mr. Waller, in the investigation directed by the above resolution, for themselves, beg leave to

Your Committee have endeavored to give to the subject committed to them, such consideration as in their judgment its importance demanded. Before proceeding to investigate, a notice was given on 'Change of the time and place of their meetings, and an invitation extended to all persons being aggrieved by reason of alleged irregularities complained of, or possessing any knowledge of irregularities in the inspection and grading of grain, or of any violations of the regulations adopted by the Board for inspecting and grading grain, to be present at our meetings and communicate such information.

In order to determine whether any violations of the established regulations for the inspection of grain have been committed, or any irregularities practiced, your Committee referred to the regulations adopted by a Committee of your board, consisting of Messrs. J. S. Rumsey, S. H. Butler and Chas. S. Dole, which were adopted by your Board, on the 15th of May, 1858, to take effect on the 15th of June following, and which your committee here beg leave to adopt as part of this report, together with the agreement signed by all the warehouses, mutually pledging themselves to the Board of Trade, "to do all in their power to assist in carrying out the system of grain inspection then adopted—a printed copy of which is appended hereto.

AGREEMENT OF THE WAREHOUSEMEN TO THE NEW RULES OF INSPECTION.

The above Committee also drew up the following agreement, which was signed by all the warehouses in the city.

We, the undersigned, proprietors of grain warehouses, at the request of a committee of the Board of Trade of the city of Chicago, appointed to confer with us in regard to carrying out the new proposed system of grain inspection, hereby agree to the following rules, viz:

We will at any time allow the inspectors free access to our buildings, for the purpose of seeing that such grade of grain as is tendered into and delivered from the same as such when such grain is being delivered, and to allow the inspectors to draw samples from the bins under the supervision of the proper officer.

PRESS AND TRIBUNE.

TUESDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 20, 1860.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

The year now about to close has been one of unusual health and abundance. And although in some portions of our State the harvest has been less plentiful than we have been accustomed to receive, and in some localities more deficient than usual has marked the season, yet, upon the whole, it has been a year of eminent prosperity to our citizens, and all the elements of success and plenty seem to have been combined in their most favorable proportions. Peace and plenty have reigned all within, and no foreign war or pestilence has visited us from abroad. We have, therefore, This the good people of our State may join in offerings of Thanksgiving for our manifold blessings, I recommend that Thursday, the 29th day of November next, be set apart and observed by them as a day of Thanksgiving and Prayer. Let, for that day, all temporal matters of business be suspended, all worldly affairs laid aside—and let us, with hearts of forgiveness, each toward all others, unite in Praise and Thanksgiving to God for the countless blessings of the closing year.

WM. H. BISSELL.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Oct. 26, '60. Gov. of Illinois.

Cotton Cultivation in Africa—A New Field for Emigrant Aid Societies.

While certain pro-slavery politicians are busily engaged upon schemes for extending the area of slavery and for reopening the African slave trade, a movement has been quietly inaugurated which promises not only to close Africa forever against the piratical incursions of slave-traders, but which will unquestionably inflict a blow upon American Slavery itself more damaging than any it has yet sustained. However much the moral aspects of slavery may have been made an element in the discussion of that subject, its character as a paying institution has ever been its strongest bulwark. For more than a century its upholders and apologists in this country have frankly admitted it to be an infraction of the moral law; but still it has held on its way, increasing both in the number of its victims and in its political influence in the government. The annual product of a cotton or sugar plantation has exerted a far greater potency upon the destiny of the institution than whole tomes devoted to the consideration of natural rights. So long as slaveholding continues to be profitable in the cotton and sugar States, rendering slave-breeding profitable in Virginia, Kentucky, and other border States, there is but little reason to expect that measures will be instituted either for its immediate or its ultimate extinction. Let the system become unprofitable, and either it will be abrogated, or, in the language of John Randolph, "the masters will run away from their slaves."

In this view of the subject the attention of philanthropists has long been turned to the production by free labor of those articles which render slave labor profitable. In the Chinese sugar cane, it is believed by many, that a means has been discovered of successfully competing with the production of sugar at the South, in every free State of the Union. Some experiments upon the fibre of flax as a substitute for cotton have been less successful; and it is now generally conceded that no vegetable product can be made to compete successfully with the cotton-plant. If slave labor directed to cotton-growing is to be made unprofitable, it must be by the more extensive and cheaper cultivation of the plant in other countries. The English Government has labored incessantly for years to introduce and foster its culture in East India; but the quality grown there is so inferior to American cotton, as to produce no appreciable effect upon the price of the latter in European markets. So far as it was expected to affect slavery in this country, cotton-growing in India may with safety be pronounced a failure.

Within the last eight or ten years explorations in Africa have brought to light the wonderful adaptation of both the soil and climate of that country to the growth of cotton. Especially has Western Africa been found to be exceedingly prolific in its production, and of good quality. The plant is indigenous to the country, is easily cultivated, and is perennial. We have the authority of Livingstone, Barth and Bowen—the latter a Baptist Missionary from Georgia to Yoruba—for saying that Africa is pre-eminently adapted to cotton-growing. But more than this—in some districts of Western Africa, the business of cotton-growing and the manufacture of it into cloth, is already conducted on a comparatively large scale. On both sides of the Niger and far up in the interior of the country, it forms the chief staple of trade. Within a few years an increased stimulus has been given to its production by the introduction of skilled labor and machinery through the agency of enterprising English merchants. Mr. Clegg, of Manchester, who has been the most active in this matter, states that up to the 1st of March last, he had sent to the district of Abbeokuta 157 cotton-gins, and that three makers of cotton-gins in Manchester have sent out through his instrumentality 250 more. Four cotton presses are already at work in the district, capable of putting up 12,000 bales annually. Add to this, that orders are in Manchester from various native traders for additional gins and presses, and the reader can form some idea as to the impetus which has been given to the production of cotton in that district. When Mr. Clegg, in 1852, first turned his attention to this subject, there had been no exports of cotton from Abbeokuta to England. In that year 1,800 pounds was brought to Great Britain. In 1856 the amount reached 11,500 pounds—in 1857 there were 35,400 pounds, and in the first five months of this year 94,400 pounds were received at Manchester from that district. From Lagos, another district, the exports of cotton in 1856 were 34,491 pounds, and in 1857 they were 114,824 pounds. Besides this export, 200,000 cotton cloths, weighing 24 lbs ea.lh, were exported to Brazil, 200,000 more, weighing 4½ to 5 lbs. each, were sold to their neighbors—and this exclusive of the home supply.

It is true these figures are small, but they none the less clearly verify that Africa possesses the soil and climate necessary for the successful cultivation of cotton. It must be borne in mind also, that the business, so far as the export trade is concerned, is yet but in its infancy. Heretofore there has been but little inducement for the extensive cultivation of the plant by the natives. They are not aware of the demand there is for the article. Mr. Clegg says that much larger quantities can be collected in Abbeokuta annually, only the natives suppose it would not be purchased if brought into the trading posts. That cotton can be grown—grown in large quantities and of good quality, in Africa, no longer admits of a question. The chief remaining inquiry is, whether the native population have the habits of industry to furnish it in such quantities as to outdown the demand in Europe for American cotton. It is represented by the travellers whom we have named above, as well as by other explorers, that in Western as Central Africa, and in the Valley of the Niger, the people are fare more civilized and possessed of a higher order of intellect than the demoralized tribes on the coast. In those districts slaves are occasionally met with containing 80,000, 100,000 and even 120,000 people, inhabited by a staple-minded, primitive and industrious race, fond of agriculture, and skilled in the use of the wheel and loom of their own construction. Those who have the best opportunity of judging, are confident that in order to secure the extensive culture of cotton by these people it is only necessary to offer them the proper inducements in the way of trade and to aid in giving their efforts the right direction.

Some of the leading men at the South already begin to manifest alarm in view of these facts. Gen. D. Green has written upon the subject, declaring that the movement is merely the initial step toward the final absorption of the whole continent by England and France, who will enslave the inhabitants and set them in growing cotton and sugar. "Is it not, therefore," he says, "apparent that the real question is who shall be enslaved the market? Our planters in the South, or French or British planters in Africa—our planters, with their hands at twenty dollars per acre, and eleven or one thousand dollars per head, or French or British masters in Africa, with hands at a penalty and slaves at fifty dollars? The fact is now, but it is to be determined. We have [illegible] and the question is now [illegible] and the question is now [illegible] and the question is now

Sawyer's Fluid Extract of Bark, an infallible remedy for the Fever and Ague, and the various forms of Bilious Diseases, Intermittent, Remittent, Chill Fever and Dumb Ague, having their origin in malaria of very fertile and marshy districts, prepared by Dr.
R. R. Sawyer, Druggist and Chemist, and sold by Sawyer, Palze & Co., No. 16 Lake street, Chicago.
This remedy is prepared entirely from vegetable substances, and contains no mercury, minerals, or anything that can prove injurious to the system. Its effects are those of a decoction and tonic, well adapted to restore the healthy action of the Liver and Stomach, when disordered as so generally happened in this class of diseases.
Quinine and other tonics serve only in many cases to break the chills, but do not remove the disease from the system, and on the slightest exposure, on which the chill and Fever depend; hence the usefulness of the "Fluid Extract of Bark," particularly in regions where Fluid-ness cannot be readily consulted, on which the chill
and Fever depend; hence the usefulness of the "Fluid

Hundreds of testimonials in regard to the efficacy of the medicine from persons of respectability, have been given to the proprietor—but he does not make use of them as he prefers to have the medicine introduce itself to the notice of the afflicted.

Special Notices.

It has been conservatively reported that in most of the Western cities, the "Town Bell" tolls every day at noon for the inhabitants to gulp down quinine as a preventive of disease caused by malaria of the climate. Of course taking quinine in a considerable habit and every new settler is enspired with the poisonous drug and instructed to take it in large quantities if he would escape the Fever and Ague. Every house has its medicine chest filled with this dangerous stuff, and as regular as the hour comes around so regular do they take it down, as though it was the richest delicacy of the season.
Dr. J. Hostetter, a good Samaritan of Pittsburgh, knowing the dreadful effects of quinine upon the human system, when taken with so much indiscretion, has prepared a compound which has in all cases in which it has been tried, proved a speedy cure for Fever and Ague, and all other diseases caused by the digestive organs.

Sawyer's Fluid Extract of Bark, an
infallible remedy for the Fever and Ague, and the various forms of Bilious Diseases, Intermittent, Remittent, Chill Fever and Dumb Ague, having their origin in malaria of very fertile and marshy districts, prepared by Dr.
R. R. Sawyer, Druggist and Chemist, and sold by Sawyer, Palze & Co., No. 16 Lake street, Chicago.
This remedy is prepared entirely from vegetable substances, and contains no mercury, minerals, or anything
that can prove injurious to the system. Its effects are those of a decoction and tonic, well adapted to restore the healthy action of the Liver and Stomach, when disordered as so generally happened in this class of diseases.
Quinine and other tonics serve only in many cases to break the chills, but do not remove the disease from the system, and on the slightest exposure, on which the chill
and Fever depend; hence the usefulness of the "Fluid Extract of Bark," particularly in regions where Fluid-
ness cannot be readily consulted, on which the chill
and Fever depend; hence the usefulness of the "Fluid Extract of Bark," particularly in regions where Fluid-
ness cannot be readily consulted, on which the chill the condition subject to the inflictions of these maladies.
Hundreds of testimonials in regard to the efficacy of
the medicine from persons of respectability, have been given to the proprietor—but he does not make use of them as he prefers to have the medicine introduce itself
to the notice of the afflicted.

Putting the Baby to Sleep.
In Dr. Holland's new Poem, "Bitter Sweet," Ruth kneels by the side of the cradle and thus beautifully soliloquizes:

"What is the little one thinking about?
Very wonderful things, no doubt, Unwritten history!
Unfathomed mystery!
Yet he laughs and cries, and eats and drinks,
And coos, and sees, and hears sounds and winks.
As if his head were full as likes And curious riddles as any sphinx!
Warm by color, and wet by tears, Punctured to pain, and tortured by fears, Our little cuckoo will take two years!
And he'll never know Where he comes or where he goes;
He need not laugh, for he'll find a so!

Who can tell what a baby thinks?
Who can follow the gossamer links By which the mannikin feels his way Out from the bare life of great unknown, Blind and wailing, and alone,
Into the light of day?
Out from the shore of the unknown sea, Tossing in pitiful agony—
Of the pain-wan sea that roils and rolls, Spocked with the barks of little souls—Barks that were launched o'n the other side, And slipped from Heaven on an ebbing tide!
What does it think—its mother's eyes?
What does he think of his mother's hair?
What of the cradle roof that flies Forward and backward through the air?
What does he think or his mother's breast—Bare and beautiful, smooth and white, Seeking it ever with fresh delight—One of the holy and sacred sights of earth?
What does he think when her quick embrace Presses his hand and buries his face Deep where the heart-throbs sink and swell With a tenderness she never can tell, Through the mantling milk of love?
Of all the things—
Words she has learned to murmur well?
Now he thinks he'll go to sleep!
I can see the shadow creep Over his eyes in sections three,
Over his lips and nose and chin,
Out to the little finger-tips!
Softly sinking, one by one!
Down he goes! Down he goes!
See! he is tucked in sweet repose!"

THE BANKRUPT.
FROM THE DANISH OF CARL BERNHARD, BY MRS.
DUSHEY.

About the end of the last century there lived in Copenhagen a wealthy merchant, whose name was Kraft. He was a proud, imperious man, who looked upon riches as the greatest of all advantages, and their possession as the universal, in fact, the only passport to, or rather source of, happiness. He was extremely rich. His house keeper declared that he must be able to count his money, he had so much; he measured his ducats by the bushel, and he was certainly worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. Born in affluence he had never seen the slightest diminution in the fortune which surrounded him, for his father's mercantile house was already in its third generation, having descended from father to son, without any lessening of its capital during that long period, as there never had been more than one son in the family. In consequence of this, the large means of the firm had remained undivided, and they had been enabled to extend their mercantile transactions over half the world.
Their acceptances were as good as ready money. The present merchant Kraft had also an only son, but he had not, in accordance with the custom of his forefathers, taken him into partnership, for he must then have made over to him—at least in appearance—a portion of his supreme authority, and he was too haughty to share his power even with his only son. He had therefore established the young man in business on his own account, though, to a certain extent, under his own surveillance.
Herr Kraft's wife had died at an early age; she had presented him with all he wished—a son, who might, in progress of time, carry on the affairs of the house and uphold its name and high credit. When she afterward presented him with a daughter, he was in alarmed at the possibility of such gifts becoming too abundant, that he thought it rather a fortunate circumstance that the birth of this child cost its mother her life. The unwelcome little girl was sent to the care of an aunt, who brought her up, and it was not until she was a young woman that she returned to her father's house; where, however, she found no sympathy. Her brother was just married to a girl with a handsome fortune, and he had removed to a house of his own. The family now consisted of Herr Kraft, senior, his daughter, and his cousin, an old maiden lady, who was received as an inmate of his house after his wife's death, to give her a home, said Herr Kraft—that he might have some one to vent his ill-humor upon, said Miss Regine herself—that there should be another torment in the house, said the counting-house clerks and the domestic servants, who hated her and her fat, snoring pet, "Mops," as much as they feared Herr Kraft and loved his daughter. For Louise was their declared favorite, and, if need had been, they would all have gone through fire and water for her.
A complete contrast to the merchant was his relative, Herr Warner. He was of a mild, unassuming character; he could easily mould his own wishes to those of others, and he valued peace above all means of doing good.
In all his actions he was guided much more by his feelings than his interests. The lives of these two gentlemen had been as different as were their characters. Herr Warner's parents had not been rich. His mother had made an unfortunate marriage, according to the merchant Kraft, for her husband had lost his small inheritance, and had gone abroad to seek for fortune under foreign skies. Herr Warner, on the contrary, considered that his mother had made a fortunate marriage, for her and her husband's mutual affection outlived the loss of their property, and if they did not get rich in the distant country to which they had gone, they at least obtained a competence there, and a peaceful, happy home.
After the death of his parents, their son went, with but a poor heritage, to the East Indies, where he married a young lady without any fortune. Good luck, however, seemed to attend him; his cotton plantations throve well and yielded large returns, and a beloved wife and three fine children made his home a paradise. At the expiration of a few years he determined to return to his native country, there to enjoy the fruits of his labors. An infectious disease, however, just then carried off his wife and her elder children, and with his youngest daughter, who alone was left to him, he sailed from India. But she died on the voyage, and was committed to the deep. Thus deprived of every tie, friendless and hopeless, the much-afflicted man quitted the ship in a French port, and repairing to Paris, he resided there for some few years, endeavoring to while away his time in the pursuit of science and literature, the pursuit of wealth having lost all interest for him, who had no one now for whom he cared to work. At length he returned to his native city, where he lived quietly, frugally, and in great retirement, visiting at very few houses except at that of his cousin, Herr Kraft, in whose family he appeared to take a warm interest; the regard, however, which he entertained for them all was only returned by the daughter, who became much attached to him. Herr Kraft made a point of disputing with him every day, and so accustomed himself to this amiable habit, that he absolutely could not do without his relative and these demi-quarrels. There were many different opinions about the state of his finances. "He must have saved something in the East Indies, where money is as plentiful as grass," said some; but others, among whom was Herr Kraft, declared "that he only had enough to shift with, and it would be a wonder if the little he possesse! should hold out during his life—for he was one of those persons whom Dame Fortune seldom favored, as he did not put a proper value on her gifts, letting his money slip through his fingers by bestowing it on every one who came with a whining tale to him, he was so foolishly soft-hearted." And Herr Kraft was right there.
In the large drawing-room, which was furnished more richly than tastefully, and where everything looked stiff rather than comforble, Herr Kraft and Herr Warner were pacing up and down. Their conversation had come to a stand. They had been disputing about some of the measures of the government, and Herr Kraft had called the government stupid and despotic; he said it took upon itself to be the guardian of the nation, and to treat the burghers as if they were children under age, prescribing to them, forsooth, what they were to do, and meddling in their own private affairs. He was as warm a supporter of free trade for the higher grade of merchants, as he was an advocate for restraints upon the working classes, for he looked upon all those in an outable sphere of life as "trash, full of fraud and trick," who must "have a rod held over their heads." It was an old story—liberality for the higher, despotism for the lower—and this will be repeated till the end of the world. Herr Warn-her had differed from him in opinion; he thought confidence might be placed in a wise government, and he wished freedom and justice for all whether they were rich or poor.
The argument might have become an angry one, but Warner gave in, for he was anxious to avoid exasperating his violent tempered cousin, to whom he had come that morning on a delicate mission, requiring no small degree of tact.
A very fine young man, who had been for some time much attached to Louise, and who had won her affections had determined to ask her hand in a respectful letter to her father.
But the reply he had received was a flat refusal, Herr Kraft having made up his mind to hear no proposals for his daughter except from a suitor selected by himself. Louise wept and was very sad. "Aunt Regine," as she was styled, favored her with sundry ill-natured dissertations upon ungrateful and disobedient children. Mops growled and snarled as if he were taking part with his mistress in the family disagreement, and Herr Kraft and household appeared even more dull and silent than usual. Herr Warner exerted himself to the utmost to bring his cousin to reason, but in vain. Herr Kraft was much enraged that his daughter should have presumed even at the home of his sister to have become intimate with any person who was unknown to him, and could not forgive her having dared even to think of any one as a lover without his permission. And the follow such a poor wretch into the bargain!" For what was a small landed property, not much bigger than a couple of peasant's cottages and cabbage gardens? He was of an ancient and noble family, it had been said—but what of that? He, Herr Kraft, did not care a straw for nobility; it was merely an idea—an imagination—that some men are to be better than others, because their forefathers, perhaps a hundred years ago, had been people of some renown. Herr Warner maintained that an "imagination" contained a moral obligation to be also a distinguished, or at least a worthy man, not to dishonor one's ancestor; and reminded his cousin that he himself was by no means indifferent to the good opinion of others.
"No, in that he was right," said the merchant; he had good grounds for his pride in his forefathers, because for more than one hundred years they had been wealthy merchants, who had established and maintained a highly esteemed commercial house. That was something solid—not mere fancy." And then he went on exhibiting all that arrogance which is sometimes to be found among rich burghers, who are quite so proud of their wealth, and their barber's brief of a century old, as any nobleman of his genealogical table, or his forefathers' wounds or scars received on the field of glory. But Herr Warner had to go away without having disclosed his errand, and could only console poor Louise with the uncertain hope of a brighter future, in which, however, he himself had little confidence.
Soon after, her prospects became still darker. Herr Kraft gave notice suddenly one day that he had promised Louise to the son of one of his commercial friends at Bergen, and that was to take place in eight days, and the wedding in three months. The husband destined for Louise was the son of a rich man, but he was far from handsome, and was still less agreeable. Herr Kraft, however, was resolved to make every preparation for the betrothal; Louise implored with tears that her father would not insist on this sacrifice; she said she would give up the man she loved, to please him, but she could not marry another.
Uncle Kraft was deaf to all entreaties, did all he could for her, and pleaded her cause with her father to the best of his ability; but Herr Kraft laughed—a thing he seldom did—at hearing him speak of true and faithful love.
Sheer folly, childishness, absurd sentimentality and foolery, that would not pay a shilling of interest."
"You will make your child miserable," said Warner.
"On the contrary, she will get a husband worth half a plum, with the prospect of a great deal more," said the father.
"That may be; but he squints, and has red flaming hair."
"Bah! People don't notice these trifles after they are married."
"But he is also dull and stupid, and obstinate and wearisome, and unfeeling and conceited—"
"Well! and what else? However, whatever he may be, she shall take him, and so—Basta!"
"She will not take him—she will throw herself into the sea rather."
"Bah! It is both wet and cold in the sea.
She will take him, because she shall do so.
To-morrow we shall have the betrothal, as my name is Kraft, and I will not hear another word on the subject. Will you give us the pleasure of your company at the betrothal? It will take place at seven o'clock in the evening precisely." Herr Kraft and Aunt Regine were the only persons in the house who slept that night.
Every one else was kep awake by uneasiness and anxiety, and the unfortunate Louise cried till her eyes were so swollen, that in the morning she could hardly read a few lines which one of the housemaids brought to her from her sympathizing friend, Herr Warner, who was always anxious, as he said, he could to comfort the afflicted. After reading them, she wept still more bitterly, and the servant girl observed her wringing her hands in despair.
The day wore on, the evening came, and at seven o'clock precisely the invited guests had all arrived, forming quite a family congress of the members of the two wealthy mercantile houses. Uncle Warner was there also.
In the morning he had requested an interview with the bridegroom, and his family elect, to him that Louise loved another, and did not entertain even the slightest friendly feeling toward him; but the young man bristled up, thrust his hand conceitedly through his carroty locks, and looked into the corner of his own eyes, while he replied with the comforting assurance, that what he had been told was nothing to the purpose, it gave him no concern, and that he would not give up the match "for any price", as he expressed himself. Uncle Warner was deeply disappointed at his ill success with the self-sufficient gentleman. They met again at the betrothal party, and the young man had arrayed himself, as he thought, to the best advantage, and looked as smiling as if he were awaiting a beloved and devoted bride. All was ready, and Aunt Regine went to Louise's apartment to bring her.
Heaven and earth! She was not there! She had gone! A letter lay on her table in her room, and that was all the information Aunt Regine could give. But old Marsh had heard some one leave the house about an hour before, and almost at the same moment she had observed a carriage drive away, which had been standing at least a quarter of an hour in the street, as if the coachman were waiting for some one. There was evidently an awful hubbub in the house. Herr Kraft rushed like a mad man from room to room, Aunt Regine hobbled after him, doors were banged, and every corner of the mansion was searched, but Louise was nowhere to be found, and it was now certain that she had fled to escape the threatened evil. The letter she had left was then read, and a heart of stone might have melted at the anguish and the terror expressed in it, as well as the consciousness with which she prayed for forgiveness; every word breathed of a spirit that was utterly crushed and prostrate. But her father threw the letter into the fire, and exclaimed, in a firm, harsh voice:
"I have no longer a daughter—her name shall never again be mentioned within my doors—I disown her—I—" Uncle Warner caught his arm, and pressed it so tightly that he involuntarily stopped, and the curse he was about to utter was arrested on his lips. Aunt Regine began to howl with rll her might.
The bridegroom and his family took their departure, and the rest of the party speedily followed their discreet example; Uncle Warner alone remained with the enraged father.
But every attempt to mollify his anger, or to awaken in his mind any regret for the harshness by which he treated his child, was a letter to this desperate step, was addressed to deaf ears. Herr Kraft's wrath was only increased by every new argument the good Warner brought forward in the hope of allaying it, and at length he took his leave, expressing his intention of making every inquiry concerning the fate of the unfortunate fugitive. But just as he left the room, the door was suddenly opened, and Her Kraft roared after him, in an imperious voice:
"I desire to be troubled with no information you may gather; and with this—Basta!"
He then slammed the door so hard, that the noise resounded through the whole house.
A whole year had elapsed, but time had no change in Herr Kraft's vindictive feelings. Constant fretting, however, had impaired his health, and he became ill. Uncle Warner thought it might be a good opportunity to soften his heart, and he led the conversation to the sad position of forsaken old age, and upon the comfort of an affectionate nurse amidst sickness and infirmities. But Herr Kraft replied that he could never be forsaken in his declining years, for he had a son, "the heir of his house;" and as far as concerned illness and infirmities, the best attendant was a one hired sick-nurse, for she thought only of the good wages she was to get, and it never entered her head to speculate upon what he might leave. He did not put any faith in all the babbling about affection and love, and such nonsense; it was self-interest and money that people thought of in this world, and those who had wealth would always get plenty of attention.
"But you might lose your fortune, you might become as poor as many others are," said Herr Warner.
The rich merchant started at him with contemptuous surprise, then, with a scornful laugh, he said:
"Yes, to be sure; the moon might fall down from the heavens, but it would not be necessary on that account to put up an umbrella. Don't teaze me any more with such nonsense. Enough of it—Basta!" Herr Kraft got better, and he resumed his accustomed rich man's life—the constant yearning and busy schemes to become richer; but in his cupidity he never thought of Providence.
The moon certainly did not fall from heaven, but within the space of three years, one fine morning, as Herr Kraft was loun

COMMERCIAL.

Commercial and Money Matters.

MONDAY EVENING, Nov. 22.

MONEY, EXCHANGE, &c.—Exchange continues plenty and is sold by outsiders as low as ¼ per cent. premium. The banks still hold it at ¾, though some of them are in favor of a reduction to one half. Discounts at bank 10 per cent., as usual. Currency continues very scarce. Gold 1@1¼. The street brokers have about vanished; though a few still buy paper at nominal rates, ranging from 1½@2 per cent. per month.

The Evening Journal says:

The legality of the issues of the Cherokee Insurance and Banking Company, is about to be tested in the United States Circuit Court, before Judge Drummond, in the case of E. Chase vs. Most, Harding & Co., and others. Chase assumes to be assignee of paper given to Curtiss & Co., of Peoria, for that kind of currency. Plaintiff, being a resident of another State, takes judgment in the U. S. Court. Defendants claim that the obligation being given for a fraudulent currency, is void. Also, that Chase is not the bona fide owner of the paper, but that Curtiss & Co. are.

The New York Times of Saturday says:

The transactions in Money to-day are reported at 5 per cent. to the Brokers, on demand, and Discounts are made at 4 per cent. on very select names at 30@60 days, and on fair bills of same, 6@7 per cent., according to classification, which has become a little stricter. The Exchange on for the Kangaroo, sailing to-morrow, were dull. There are buyers on London at 109 per cent., but as the pretensions of the leading bank drawers are a small fraction above, there is not much business accomplished. No change in France.

COMMERCIAL.—The Breadstuffs markets were unusually to-day. Wheat was in very limited demand—there being scarcely any inquiry for Winter. Spring wheat was also in very dull, and sales of No. 2 were made at a range of 59@61¼¢ in store; and 50c for Rejected. There was more inquiry for Corn, with a few sales of No. 1 at 59c f. o. b.—and Ear Corn at 45c on track. Oats are firm. Barley dull. Highwines, 19@20c. Flour was in rather better inquiry, with sales at $5.85@6.75 for good Spring Extras.

The following table shows the amount of Flour and Grain in store on the 20th inst.—compared with the amount in store the week previous, and the corresponding date of 1857:

FLOUR AND GRAIN IN STORE AT CHICAGO.

	Nov. 20, 1858.	Nov. 13, 1858.	Nov. 21, 1857.
Flour, bbls	2,000	4,000	1,649
Spring Wheat, bu	118,000	200,197	124,591
Winter "	1,000	1,744	1,000
White "	5,000	20,000	845
Corn, bu	20,000	20,000	4,000
Oats, bu	97,118	111,000	4,682
Barley, bu	21,000	5,000
Rye, bu	2,000	2,000

When the statement of the amount of Flour and Grain was posted on "Change this morning, there was considerable surprise expressed at the reduction in the amount of Wheat in store since, the 13th instant; and on taking the amounts in store on the 13th, adding to it the receipts of the week, and then subtracting therefrom the shipments of the week, it was found that there was a deficit of 104,000 bushels. "Where had this Wheat gone?"—was the all-important query. We did not mill it—and the shipments showed that it was not sent out of the city. Where, then could it be? The probable answer to this query, on investigation will be, that we never had it, and therefore could not have lost it; or if we had it, it has been lost in "shrinkage." The statement now reported in store is probably correct.

The receipts of Rye Flour yesterday and to-day were smaller, and the market was not as lively. The yards, however were nearly cleaned out, with the exception of light lots, which are not wanted by packers. Buyers, however, observe great caution in making purchases, and there is an evident disposition to bear the market down. Heavy Hogs sold at 4c, and Light at 3¾@4c. The market for Dressed Hogs were also dull, and were a shade lower—the mild weather causing the market in the evening to close dull and heavy. Operators, since the decline in Cincinnati, have become extremely nervous, and parties are watching the turn of the next few days with much interest.

The Provision market, however, remains firm. There are numerous orders here for Mess Pork at $12@12.25, but holders are firm at $13, at which price quite a sale of 300 bbls. A sale of There is a good demand for Green Meats, but holders are firm at 7c for Hams, 4¾c for Shoulders, and 6¼@6¾c for Sides, at which figures there are no buyers. Lard is firm and nominal at 9¾@10c—nearly all the holders asking the latter figure.

HOG AND PROVISION TRADE.

[From the Cincinnati Gazette, 20th.]

The market for hogs opened this morning as it closed yesterday, under a cloud, and there were few buyers, while sellers were numerous at the decline noticed in last evening's report: but as the day advanced, and in the afternoon particularly, a firmer feeling was observable, with indications of a reaction. The receipts were 13,500 head against 17,000 head yesterday. This was a large number for one day, but as it showed a falling off compared with the previous 24 hours, it was posted up to the favorable side. A further decrease in the next twenty-four hours will operate again in favor of sellers. The transactions comprised about 2,500 head at prices ranging from $4.15 to $6.30. Sales were made with difficulty within this range, but at $6 a large business might have been transacted, and the disposition, on the part of buyers to operate, was so strong that trifling influences would lead to an advance upon that figure. Should the receipts, therefore, be reported to-morrow, show any material decrease, a turn in favor of sellers may be looked for.

[From the Toledo Blade, 20th.]

Dressed Hogs sells at 5½@5 6¾, as to quality.

[From the Albany (N. Y.) Statesman, 19th.]

The only sale we hear of to-day is 96 head State $6.00, and dividing on 200 lbs. There were sold yesterday 1,100 head western $5.50 gross and to day 48 head State 6¼@7c dividing 175 lbs and up to 6¾c average 146 lbs.

[From the Ottawa (Ill.) Republican, 20th.]

The trade in dressed Hogs has opened with a fair prospect of remunerative prices through the winter season. We learn that Mr. David Strawn is contracting for all the hogs he can get at prices varying from $4.25 to $5.00 a hundred, and other buyers will probably be in the market.

[From the Fulleonian, (Fulton Co., Ill.,) 17th.]

The packing season is about commencing, though upon a somewhat reduced scale in comparison to what has heretofore been done. Hogs are scarce in this region the present season. Packers are offering from $4.00 to $4.50. There will not probably be more than half the usual quantity packed this season.

[From the Dubuque (Iowa) Express and Herald, 21st.]

Yesterday quite an advance took place in the prices of pork. Fine fatted dressed pork brought from 4¾ to 5c per lb. It is being shipped off to Chicago and other places in bulk. We hope that our pork raisers will get well paid for their labor and investments this season.

[From the Alton Courier, 20th.]

Another freezing night, and clear cool day. Roads are improving. Trade is looking up. Hogs in market brisk. Quotations from $5.50@6.00. Something doing yesterday and to-day in beeves. Prices $3.50 for poor or middling to $4.00 and $4.50 for good and heavy.

They require no adjusting, and with the high valve which they use, will work without injuring their machinery, have converted the severe jerks of one into the regular movement of a mechanical adventure."—[Everett's Lecture on the Discovery of America.

"The further this work proceeds the more do we feel that it must take its place as an essentially satisfactory history of the United States."—[London Athenæum.

"From the copious extracts which we have given from this volume (VII.) it will be seen that in respect of composition it is a model of various construction. It does not display the sweet and careless flow of the history of Hume, nor the occasional brilliant antithesis of Thucydides or Tacitus, but in its account it will be welcome to all readers for the simplicity and grace of language with sparklingness of phrase, while its abundant illustrations of the heart of Nature fully sustain the opinion of the Scotch poet Campbell, that poetry."—[New York Tribune.

"We must pay to the volume (VII) as a whole, the tribute of unstinted and exalted praise."—[North American Review.

"Mr. Bancroft's work improves as it advances. We are glad to find that the calm, dignified and temperate tone is continued in the more difficult parts of the narrative on which he has now entered. Enough of this is the author throws it to his pages to sustain interest—never enough to give offense."—[London Literary Gazette.

"It is as much a matter of course with us to expect eruditions and elegant volumes from Mr. Bancroft as to see a new book by Sancroft as to expect a dazzling light and a fertilizing heat from the sun, and surprises us little when as the other."—[New York Eve. Post.

GREAT NATIONAL WORK!

BANCROFT'S

History of the United States.

Published by

LITTLE, BROWN & CO.,

112 WASHINGTON-ST., BOSTON.

A HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES FROM THE DISCOVERY OF THE AMERICAN CONTINENT. By Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT. With Portraits, Maps, etc., Vols. I to VII. 8vo, cloth, now ready.

VOLUME VII is also issued as Vol. 1, of the American Revolution, of which it commences the history, concluding with an account of the Battle of Bunker Hill.

VOLUME VIII will shortly appear, and the remaining volumes as soon as prepared for the press.

The unequalled facilities possessed by Mr. Bancroft in the preparation of these volumes, and the many years of labor and research which he has bestowed upon them, together with the admirable and attractive style in which they are written, have caused this great work to be universally regarded, both in Europe and America, as the best history of this country yet produced, and as a standard and authority.

"Among the historians who have attained a high and deserved reputation in the United States within the last few years, are to be included those who have made George Bancroft. His experience in political and diplomatic life, his habits of thought, his extensive reading, and his singular union of the highest mental faculties, enable us to predict with confidence that his work will be reckoned among the genuine master-pieces of historical genius."—Westminster Review.

"This noble theme has been treated with a beauty and a power by one whom I need not name in this presence as a literary ornament of his country, without impairing their authenticity, have converted the severer pages of annals into the most fascinating reading of national adventure."—[Everett's Lecture on the Discovery of America.
